

A Review of Dinosaurs across America By Phil Yeh
By Jack

Patrick the Rabbit is tricked into paying 50 dollars to buy a train ticket to Hawaii. Of course, Hawaii is an island in the middle of the ocean, so there are no trains going there. He searches around NY city to try to find the con man who tricked him. But he can't find him anywhere. But he does find some reading dinosaurs who he tries to sell the tickets to. But they are too up on Geography. And so he has a contest with them: if he can name more capitals of American than they can, they have to buy his tickets. If he loses, he has to go to school and study!

And so begins this fun and informative journey through the states. As well as learning the names of the capitals, you will learn some fun facts about each state.

I really enjoyed Dinosaurs across America and will look out for more of Phil Yeh's books.
