

Jack's Nature Journal
4-28-09

Whew! It was hot this morning. Actually, hot doesn't quite begin to describe it. However, I believe that 88.3°F and 31.3°C does. Is it really that hot? Yes, I'm afraid it is. And it was even worse yesterday, when I was happy to go into the freezing cold water to get out of the heat. Thankfully, there should a thunderstorm tonight that will break the heat and bring us down to around 70°F, which is my favorite temperature. Anyway, the sky was 6 oktas full of cirrostratus clouds, which are moving at the depressing speed of 2.5 mph from the West. The humidity is 26%, which isn't that bad, and the air pressure is 30.24 inHg.

We saw two mockingbirds, some robins, two male cardinals and a female being chased by the others, some grumpy little birds chasing each other around in the trees, a Turkey Vulture and a Barn Swallow flying around and eating bugs.