

The Heroic Quest

1. What age with your hero be?

14, my age.

2. Boy or girl?

A boy.

3. What things do you see your hero doing?

Well, since my idea for my novel is a fantasy: Stealing treasure from under the nose of a sleeping dragon, learning to control magic (and not blow up in the process), sailing on a sea monster-hunting ship, trying to join a wizard's society.

4. Write down a few things you already know about your hero:

He's a bit cowardly when it comes to physical violence and would much rather settle his problems non-violently or if necessary, with a spell (which could backfire horribly).

He wants to be a mage, and has shown some skill in the that area (which is from his mother's side of the family, although she has no skill in that area), but lacks the necessary control to complete any spell.

He lives in the Common Quarter of a large trading city.

His father and his uncle are the leaders of a small band of thieves near the docks of the city, and have been responsible for many small thefts from trading ships stopping in at port. His father, of course, refers to himself as just using his skills to insure that the family can eat.
