

A Review of Frosty the Snowman

If you are a person who loves to play in the snow, or once loved to play in the snow, or will play in the snow, if only you get some time to do so, then this is the show for you! I would recommend you go and see it at the Growing Stage Theater in Netcong, but unfortunately I just caught the final show there, so you can't. Anyway, the plot of this Frosty the Snowman is quite different from anything you have seen before in the Frosty the Snowman movie. It goes a bit like this....

One winter's eve three years ago, Samantha was sitting in her bed and thinking winter thoughts when all of a sudden a song popped into her head. Immediately, she was surrounded by a crowd of people singing "Frosty the Snowman". Her first thought was "Could a snowman come to life?". Her second thought, of course, was "What are these people doing in my room?" The mysterious carolers departed, leaving Samantha with only the idea of bringing a snowman to life. And so, when the big science fair comes along, she and her lab partner, James, decide to bring a snowman to life. But it won't be easy, what with a disbelieving science teacher with an absurdly long name, a sneaky megalomaniac named Sydney and her sidekick, Worm, and even James, who refuses to believe that anything but science could bring a snowman to life!

Frosty the Snowman was very well written and superbly polished (it was the last night of the show, of course), and all the actors worked their magic to make it believable (well, as much as a snowman coming to life can be believable!). I really enjoyed going to see it!
