

Whatever Happened to Penny Candy is based on the Austrian and Monetarist Schools of Money. These are called what they are called because the first School's founders were from Austria, and the second School believe that the amount of money circulating in the economy is important.

Alan Greenspan, Austrian School, was made chairman of the Federal Reserve system.

Friedrich A Hayek, Austrian School, won the Nobel Prize for economics.

James M Buchanan, Austrian School, won the Nobel Prize for economics.

Milton Friedman, Monetarist School, won the Nobel Prize for economics.
