

Jack's Nature Journal
1-14-08

My goodness, how time flies! We have been through two weeks of January already. The weather for today was much like yesterday, but less windy and much, much colder. Brrrrr. The clouds were all really high in the sky and were cirrostratus. There wasn't really that much wind, but I recorded 4 mph from the WNW on my anemometer. The temperatures are 21.7°F and -5.7°C! That explains why my nose still feels deep-frozen! The air pressure is 30.09, which means that the weather is probably going to be nice today, and the humidity is 38%.

We saw a turkey vulture, some sparrows, and mom says that she saw a woodpecker, but I didn't see it. Maybe tomorrow we will see more in the way of wildlife.