

Jack's Nature Journal

1-20-08

This morning was as bright and sunny as yesterday was not. The snow clouds were gone, and the sky was about 5 oktas full of wispy, transparent cirrus clouds. The sun reflected off the soft snow, making it hard to see for those of us who forgot to wear their sunglasses (I include myself in their number!) The wind was coming from the NW at a high of 5.5 mph, the air pressure was 30.94 inHg, the humidity was 46% and the temperatures were 27.7°F and -2.4°C. It was a nice, if chilly day.

Today we saw a Winter Wren, which was very cute and chirpy whilst it sat in a bush on our street, and a mockingbird that went “TWEET TWEET TWEET!” very loudly.
