

Jack's Nature Journal
6-8-09

Hello, and welcome back to Jack's Nature Journal! Today, we looked out the window in the early morning and a great big thunderstorm was raging. Big claps of thunder smashed our ear drums. But it stopped before we went out for our walk. It was sunny and beautiful outside today, if a little bit wet from the rain. The air pressure was 29.98 inHg, the humidity was 66% and the temperatures were 78.8°F and 26°C. The wind was not blowing enough to be picked up.

This morning we spotted a lot of mockingbirds flying around and squawking. It seems like they can only hold a particular song for about three seconds before going on to another one. We also heard a woodpecker in the woods, and saw a bluebird.