

A Review of the Mythic Creatures Exhibit

I really enjoyed going to the mythic creatures exhibit at the American Museum of Natural History. Mostly I liked it because I love mythic creatures. I recommend it to anyone who does (and even those who don't really know whether they like them or not)!

When you first walk into the exhibit, you see this gigantic dragon model. It is huge, and really makes an impression on you. As you continue into the sea area, you learn about the Kraken, the Kappa and whole host of other creatures, mostly nasty. I really enjoyed this part, and spent most of my time there.

Next you walk into the land area. From giant skulls and bones to Bigfoot to Chupacabras (goat sucker), there are loads of cool and weird creatures here. My favorite monster from this part was the Chupacabra.

The next part was the air area. This was really cool! Have you ever seen a Roc, a bird the size of an elephant? Well, if you want to, just go into that room and look up! My favorite animal was a huge flightless bird that existed into the 1800s! Unfortunately, it was hunted to extinction.

My favorite part was the dragon part! Because I love dragons! I was very glad that they had given them their own part. They deserve one. In this part you'll learn all about Western and Eastern dragons. My favorite part was the video about dragons, because it had a computer-animated dragon in it!

I really enjoyed the mythic creatures exhibit, and I thoroughly recommend it.
